Why is he smiling so much when he doesn't have a nose?! Arrange the texture of the skin - if only. I like to check the TK Maxx beauty section occasionally, just in case I got into some cheap Nip+ Fab stuff whose use-by-date I'm afraid to look at. Imagine my surprise when I found some Holika Holika leaf masks out there, all tied up in crappy Sellotape. I tried to look cool and calm, enticing a fellow Asian skincare enthusiast smelled of the scent of a bargain. Fortunately, the only people out there were the old ladies and the guy who seemed determined to ride out the Conor McGregor suit trend to the bitter end. I have 4 of these Honey (not sure why it's in the inverted comma, but I've seen worse grammatical errors on the packaging) sheet masks for €8. Good price for a tin mask in the wild! For those of you who've never used one, letter masks seem to be designed solely for the purpose of scaring your significant other/roommate, but they're much more than that. These are lightweight paper masks that have been drenched in essence, which varies depending on the type or taste you get. You throw them on your face for 20 to 30 minutes, deal with the look like a Budget Michael Myers and then emerge from your goosebumps with glowing skin. My first picture on this blog is extremely flattering. As you can see from the picture, the mask did not fit very well. I was actually surprised that it was too big because the tin masks are usually too small for the giant heads of us Irish (complete generalization there). Sheet masks are always like slopping a cold piece of kitchen towel on your face (we're not selling it well here, but it's pretty reassuring), and that wasn't the exception. I noticed that my face was muttering a little after the first fifteen minutes, so I decided to take it before it was recommended. I stayed with lots of goose essence on my face, so I pated what was left in my skin. Overall, I found this mask a little 'meh'. It didn't sit well, and the slide was pretty off-putting. After taking the mask off, I noticed that tingling happened in places where I had a breakout recently so it may be honey working its magic on them! My skin felt hydrated afterwards and had a bit of glow, but overall I had better. My fiancée got a bad burn over the weekend, so I gave him the rest of the stash to help him cool down. I had to discourage him from posting his letter-face like his profile picture for the sake of his mother's heart. Rating: 3 out of 5. You can buy it at TK Maxx (if the k-beauty swarms haven't gotten there yet) or here Jolse.com. Glossary (aka WTF says?) Essence: Essence is a super-powered gel or cream that you use after cleaning. It often involves high concentrations of moisturizing components such as hylauronic acid. Taste: Used when referenci referring to tin masks. The taste of the mask comes from the main ingredient. For this mask, it's a honey flavor. Other flavours include aloe vera, tea tree, blueberry and placenta. (yum!) Morning everyone! Today I'm drinking some green tea we picked up in Uji, Japan. Oh, creaminess! Last night I tried a mask that I found (inexplicably) in my local 7-Eleven: Holika Holika Nourishing Honey Mask I peeled the sticker off to find the ingredients: water, glycerine, alcohol, hyaluronate soda, PEG-60 hydrogenated castor oil, carbomer, triethanolamine, honey extract, milk protein extract, coconut nucifer extract (coconut) fruit extract, citrus limon (lemon) fruit extract, allantoin, disodium EDTA, phenoxyethanol, fragrance HERE is a reference to the cosDNA rating! My BEFORE face (cleansed & toned): A peek inside the packet: There's no plastic backing, it's just folded in on its own. I like the fit! I had to fold in a few places for my chin area, but otherwise not bad! I'm like. It was a typical material sheet mask - the thickness was about average, and it didn't slide around on my face at all. The amount of essence in the mask was good - not too little, and not so much that drips. My AFTER face the next morning: I had a couple of breakouts recently (that time of the month again), so I got those pink spots from mizon acence defects from Pink Spot. I liked this mask! It smelled very, very sweet and heavily made of honey. It's very moisturizing and soothes any irritation on my face. So far, it's my favorite honey mask of all the ones I've tried!
